The collaborative will kick-off exchange and learning across South Asia, South-East Asia and East Asia regions

ACCESS Health International, health systems think tank, advisory group, and implementation partner with the support of The Rockefeller Foundation has launched the Global Learning Collaborative for Health Systems Resilience (GLC4HSR).

The GLC4HSR is a global community of health systems experts and actors who co-develop and share knowledge and best practices towards building resilience and preparedness of health systems against pandemics and other health and social crises.

GLC4HSR is a first-of-its-kind multi-regional, multi-sectoral initiative with a vision to facilitate a synergistic exchange of knowledge between regions. It is a cross-discipline network of technical experts, practitioners, and health policy actors from both the public and private sectors. It brings together national and subnational governments, regional and global health bodies, the private healthcare industry, academic and research institutes, and development agencies.

GLC4HSR was envisaged to provide a platform to discuss, debate and formulate strategies to safeguard all people against future crises. GLC4HSR members gain access to resources and tools that can be applied to help health systems maintain core functions during shocks and crises.
